Increasingly, I am meeting with learners who have varied interests and are well-rounded in many areas. The traditional university degree programs seem limited and limiting. Undergraduate degrees are a time for exploration, for figuring out who you are and where your passions lie. Embarking on a degree that allows you to explore many different areas before deciding where to focus is the best fit!

Why not study PPLE (Politics, Psychology, Law and Economics) at the University of Amsterdam? Or at IE University in Madrid. Both Amsterdam and Madrid are European cities with incredible access to the rest of the continent. As a student in either of these PPLE programs, you will join a select group of dynamic, international students interested in solving social challenges
